In yesterday's editorial the Editor deplores the want of able men for the management foreign affairs. The Chinese are still dependent on foreign advisers, which ought not to be the case, and although everyone is ready to declare that he understandy foreign buildess thoroughly, as a matter of fact they know non Chinese literature, which is the only test at the examinations by which sutry is obtained intoofficial life, is utterly insufficient, and advocates special training and upholds a practice that has latterly crapt in of appointing men in the foreign departments of the public offices who have not passed the examinations. The Editor is apparently striking out a bold line but the article is probably an answer to complaints on the part of the literary class that

We have not lost one case of intermittent fever during the year. Antipyrin certainly seems very efficacious in hese cases, it promotes free perspiration and under its administration the temperature falls much quicker than when disphoreties or other antinyretics are given:

In many mild cases in which the temperature only rises to say 102 ° or 103 ° F. in the initial stage a combination o antipyrin and quinine in the proportion of 8 grains of the former to 5 Servant, grains of the latter given every 4 hours is all that is necessary, the fever often succumbing to this treatment in three or four days. Notwithstanding the large doses of quinine, in many cases as much as 2 drachms being given in the twenty-four hours, very few bad effects are produced and then only in a few cases tinuitus or slight deafness.
